EDITORIAL NOTE.

This number completes the first year's issue of this magazine. It has won for itself, on its merits, a distinct place among the monthlies of the country. Its original articles and book reviews have been written by representative men. Its monthly bibliography is a valuable and unique feature. Its "Goodly Words" department has been appreciated by all who turn to the Mystics for a peculiarly edifying style of literature. Its translations and reprints of English and American journals have made its readers acquainted with much of the best current religious thought. Each month's number has brought an instalment of the famous papers on Agnosticism, and, as an appendix, a part of "The Concise Dictionary of Religious Knowledge," of which, during the year, 500 pages have appeared, and these have been separately bound. Thus the magazine has fulfilled its obligations and promises, and it expects to be equally true in future to its mission, to give the best thought of our times on religious themes, and to present some standard religious work which readers will be glad to possess in separate bound form on completion in the supplement to the magazine.
